DANIELS TAKES UP FIGHT ON LIQUOR

Blind Tigers Must Stop if Port Royal Is to Be Rehabilitated.

MUST PROTECT NAVY'S MEN

Promises That Under Proper Conditions Plant Will Be Developed.

BY P. H. MeGOWAN.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.] Washington, May 16.—Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, sees more in being the head of the government's big naval establishment than planning gigantic dreadnaughts, of 40,000 tons burden, of building swifter ships or increasing the personnel of his fighting force. What he really sees is the man behind the guns and his moral and spirtual welfare. That's where his intertival welfare. behind the guns and his moral and spiritual welfare. That's where his interests lie and right there is where he may be found centring his energies. On the man behind the guns lies the future welfare of the mayal service. Build up the man—make him a better man, physically, mentally and morally, The Sanatawa says and you will have The Secretary says, and you will have a better navy. On the contrary, until you have a better man you need hardly expect a better navy.

This was what Secretary Daniels told a delegation of South Carolina Congressmen to-day when they called upon him to see what could be done towards rehabilitating the old Port Royal naval station. In the delegation Representatives Byrnes Whaley and one or two well-known Charleston citizens.

Mr. Daniels has just returned from his Southern trip, and was most en-thusiastic. He spoke of the beauties of the old city of Charleston, with its ever increasing attractions, of the great usefulness of the Brooklyn navy-yard, and what it ought to do hereafter in the shipbuilding line, of the abandonment of Pensacola and New Orleans, and of what he hoped to accomplish as a result of his trip. Then the topic of conversation drifted around to the Port Royal station. The Secretary said that he was most hopeful of making of that place the equal of what he had once seen in its best days when workshops were run-ning full blast, when the island upon and prosperous future. He depicted what once had been done there, and said that he saw little reason why the same things or even better things testimony on the vital point whether could not be accomplished in the fu-Then turning suddenly to those had called upon him, he said that who had called upon him, he said that there was one thing that would have to be done before he would move a peg. Step the sale of "blind tiger" liquor to the men at the barracks, he said, and you will see Port Royal blossom like the rose in springtime.

One thing must be done, he maintained before he felt that he could take.

makes men crazy—should be stopped.
He designated three kinds as being especially objectionable—what is known as pop skull, chain lightning and kill-indiced by the men who are sent to Port Royal, and you will see wonderful changes in that section. Until this is done and the young manhood of the paval service protected, little need be expected. It is the men, he said, who make the navy.
